held the previous two years at the Rocky Mountain Blue Resort in Keystone, Colo.

The conference gathers Force Support professionals from around the world, providing the latest information on initiatives and trends impacting Manpower, Personnel and Services support. General and breakout session speakers will detail the way ahead on issues identified from the field as having the biggest impact on daily operations.

More than 500 attendees are expected to gain invaluable knowledge in recent career field changes and ongoing mergers, strategic planning and operational trends.

Top Air Staff leaders and general officers will give briefings throughout the conference regarding the status of forces and providing the strategic vision. The conference also provides a once-a-year opportunity to meet and discuss successes, challenges and new insights in an informal atmosphere. A plethora of topics will be discussed, with each functional area addressing key topics that will continue to shape and define the future of the A1 community.

The conference's highlight event — the annual awards banquet — takes place on Thursday, March 11, when Air Force-level individual and organizational awards will be presented. As one of the highlights of the conference, more than 150 career field award winners for various specialties will be recognized, with the top eight awards being formally recognized at the banquet. These awards will recognize the best of the best in the A1 community for outstanding contributions and unyielding service.
